Matt Shade from the Franklin County Board of Elections will present on how GIS can be used in the field of election administration. Studying the geographical component to voter registration data can not only provide a level of quality control to the assignment of voters based upon political boundaries but also can be used as a metric of population trends in a given area that can be used to eliminate as many impediments as possible to those who wish to cast a ballot. The use of GIS will also be presented to assist with the logistical aspects of elections from distributing supplies and equipment to obtaining and displaying the results in a fair and timely manner.
