Presentation by Scott Miller, the Director of the Center for Energy, Economics and the Environment at the Voinovich School of Leadership and Public Affairs at Ohio University. His presentation is “Ohio’s Energy Supply Chains” and below is a brief outline.

“Energy is an enormous economic driver for the state of Ohio, from the extraction of fossil fuels to the design and engineering of clean technology. Ohio University has focused significant resources over the last several years to collect, store and map data and information to better understand the important role that energy businesses have on the State’s economy. This talk will focus on the rationale and results of Ohio University studies on Ohio’s energy supply chain, including shale energy and renewables like wind and solar. Additional emphasis will be paid to the impact the energy industry has on regional and statewide economic growth.”
